

Moving your pin when you travel

Working out of a different town for a while? Move the pin there and owners in that town find you.

The pin is where you are, not where you live.

Owners see your pin and your circle. Your street address is never shown.

Move it back when you come home.

The profile asks every month or so whether the pin is still right. Saving says yes.

2 Scroll to Your technicians and where they work, and under Which town is this type the town you are working from now.

Pick it from the list and the pin jumps there. Or drag the pin on the map yourself.

not a place you sometimes park, so put each one where that technician actually works from. If somebody is off, or a pin is spare, switch that one off rather than leaving it on the map for an owner to call.

Which town is this

Oklahoma City, OK

Type the town or your zip code and pick from the list, and the pin lands there. A zip drops the pin in the middle of the zip and names the nearest town, because a town name is what owners type. Every town several technicians spread out it is the difference between moving Frank's pin and moving Mark's by mistake.

It follows the new town on its own. The line under it shows exactly what your listing will say, like Tucson, AZ, 40 mile radius. Save, and the map, your listing and your page all move together.

What owners see

Oklahoma City, OK

This fills in from the town you picked and that is fine to leave alone. Worth changing if a region reads better than one town, like North Georgia or Central Florida, because plenty of owners search that way. Pick a new town above and this follows it, so check it after you move.

On your listing this reads: Oklahoma City, OK · 40 mile radius

How far you travel for a repair (miles)

40

Be honest with this. An owner broken down on the roadside calls you because your circle said you cover them. If the answer is that you cannot get there for five hours, or you do not work that area, they have wasted their time and you have wasted yours. Set it to what you actually do.
